

Watching your eyes!

Trick N. 6 March, 2006

Simple, but amazing!

The spectator takes one card and shows it to the audience. Then he puts it back in the deck, and he cuts the deck three times. The magician takes the deck and looks at the cards, also at the spectator eyes, because the eyes can tell many things, one begins the card! The magician takes one card from the deck and puts it on the table face down, and asks the spectator. Which is your card? The spectator says his card, then the magician tells him to turn the card on the table face up, the spectator does so and the card on the table is the spectator's card.

Secret:

It is very easy, but you need to practice all the moves and expressions. In the deck, separate red cards from the black cards. Put the black cards on the red cards. Spread the cards in your hands and tell the spectator pick a card. You need spread just the black cards that are on the top of the deck, so the spectator will take a black card. Tell him to show the card to everybody, in this moment you put back the cards in your hands and spread them again but only the cards on the bottom that are red. The spectator puts his card back in the deck, so his card will be in any place in the red cards. Put the deck on the table and tell the spectator to cut the deck and completed it three times.

Don't worry nothing happens, because it is in a circle. Take the deck and look for the spectator's card. It is the only black card in the red cards, so it is easy to know which his card is. You need to play up the situation. Watch the spectator's eyes and tell him that the eyes will reveal the card. So, take his card and put it on the table face down. Ask him what is the card that he took, and when he say the card, ask him to turn over the card that is on the table, because you don't want to touch it again. He will turn over the card, and it will be his card!
